there will be at least three hunired acres planted in vines next spring, rations having been made this ummer. In this neighborhood the culture has been successful on both bottom and hill lands, the soil being entirely successful. There is one very boyish experiment. noticeable feature connected with the grape culture in this immediate vicinity. There is a scope of territory running along the Olio river from Deep Run, five miles above the city, to Bellair, four miles below, in which there has never been, even in the most unfavorable seasons, anything approaching has never been, even in the most unfavorable seasons, anything approaching a general failure of the crop; in fact, we might say that every season has proved a success. This is attributed to dollars and costs for lewd conduct.

WE notice the advertisement of Stein everything else in our line of business, which we will sell lower for cash than any other house in the city.

Since the introduction of the grape, to sell." lands suitable for vineyards have been steadily increasing in value. Sites on acre, and hill lands from one hundred to three hundred dollars per acre. Location, however, is the prime consideration, and price is nothing in comparation, and price is nothing in comparison; for with the proper location, success is certain. An acre of grapes is considered to be worth a thousand dollars in any location. How much more valuable it is where failure is unknown, we leave the reader to determine. The average yield of wine per acre is estimated at four hundred gallons. The less times and the per acre is estimated at four hundred gallons. The less times are the per acre is estimated at four hundred gallons. The less times are the per acre is estimated at four hundred gallons. gallons. The best vineyards, however, will produce six hundred gallons. The wine sells readily at from $1.50 to $2.00 per gallon. With this showing, it may be a matter of surprise to some that more persons have not engaged in the

It must be remembered that lands are high, and that it requires a heavy out-lay of capital and the employment of experienced cultivators, while returns cannot be obtained inside of three years. It is this heavy outlay and contiqued expense which prevents men of tiqued expense which prevents men of small means from embarking in an enterprise which makes such splendid returns when the vines have reached the bearing period. We should also add in the estimate of original expenditures, the cost of a wine cellar, which is essential to every well conducted vine-sential to every well conducted vine-yard. There is also one want in this community, which has not yet been community, which has not yet been supplied, and that is a large and complete bottling cellar. We understand that is is now in contemplation to erect that is not that it is now in contemplation to erect that it is now in contemplation to erect th

For this purpose they propose purchasing a piece of land lying near the city, containing fifty acres already in grapes. When this has been accomplished, Wheeling will have eve-rything necessary for the manufacture of native wines in large quantities.

Until recently the Isabella and Cataw-ba were the only varieties of grapes cultivated. But of late years the Cou-cord, Delaware, Robecca and Virginia Seedling have been introduced and cultivated with success. As a table grape we believe the Concord has the prefer ose who have embarked in this ence, but for wine the Catawba and Virginia Seedling is preferred over all others, the Virginia Seedling being the increasing the number and area of increasing the number and area of favorite, the wine produced being of favorite, the wine produced being of superior quality, much resembling pure heretofore considered worthless port. The vine is strong and hardy reposes of cultivation, have sud-become valuable and are eagerly free from all diseases.
